LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.

LABRADORITE

Labradorite, named after the area of eastern Canada where large deposits have been found is a Calcium or Sodium Aluminum Silicate. Its main claim to fame is the iridescent play of color which can be quite dramatic when a specimen is turned at the correct angle, producing a shimmering play of red, blue, gold and purple. Its main use is ornamental.