ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.

ARAGONITE STAR

Aragonite is a fairly common mineral closely related to calcite. It forms many different shapes, from solid masses to delicate cave formations. One of the most interesting is this "star". It is a group of small six-sided crystals grown together to produce this radiating "star" pattern.