UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.

UNAKITE

Unakite is the state gemstone of Virginia, even though it was first identified in the Unaka Mountains on the boundary of North Carolina and Tennessee. Unakite is actually a rock containing two different minerals, red or pink Feldspar, and green Epidote. The contrast between these two colors has made Unakite a very popular jewelry stone with amateur gem cutters.