HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.

HOWLITE

Howlite is a soft, porous, chalky white stone which frequently occurs as nodules with tiny veins of black or gray color. It occurs in sedimentary beds and is used for ornamental objects such as bookends, carvings, etc. Because it is very porous it can be easily dyed to resemble other more expensive gemstones such as Turquoise and Sugilite.