ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.

ARROWHEAD REPLICA

Flint (gray), Obsidian (black) and sometimes Jasper (red or brown) were favorite materials of primitive man in North America for the production of tools and weapons. These materials can be chipped or knapped easily to produce sharp points and edges, ideal for cutting flesh. The Indians of North America used Flint and Obsidian to make arrowheads, knives, hide scrapers, sewing needles, jewelry and ceremonial objects.