OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.

OPTICAL CALCITE

Calcite is a very common mineral composed mainly of Calcium Carbonate. Optical Calcite has a rhombohedral crystal structure and is colorless and transparent. It is used in making optical instruments, particularly polarizing microscopes. Optical Calcite possesses the unique ability to split one ray of light into two, otherwise know as "double refraction". An object viewed through this crystal will be seen doubled.