DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.

DALMATIAN JASPER

This unusual stone named for the famous fire-house mascot dog, Dalmatian Jasper is a unique and interesting variety of Agate (Silicon Dioxide). It was discovered only recently in the desert regions of Northern Mexico and is very new to the gemstone market. It is quite hard and takes a very good polish. Its uses at the present time are solely ornamental, in carved and polished objects.