BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.

BOX OF "GOLD"

The miners of the old west called this mineral fool's Gold. Its shiny golden color and heavy weight fooled inexperienced prospectors into thinking they had struck it rich. Chemically it is Iron Sulfide, not related to Gold at all and is correctly called Pyrite. It is a very common mineral and is found in many different kinds of rocks. It is used today to produce Sulfuric Acid because of its Sulfur content.